Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta was one of the most charitable women in history. Her death was a great loss to many, but most of all, to the sick and the poor.

Mother Teresa was born in 1910 in Albania. When she was 18 years old, she left her comfortable home and joined a convent in Ireland. There she chose her name, Sister Teresa, in memory of Saint Thérèse of Lisieux.

She was still doing her religious training in 1928 when she went to India. There, she took her vows. While she was serving as the principal in a Catholic high school in Calcutta, Mother Teresa was moved by the number of sick people in the city's streets. People were living without hope. People were dying without comfort. In 1948, she left the convent to serve the sick. Two years later, she established a new order of sisters which she called the Missionaries of Charity.

As they were working, Mother Teresa and her Missionaries of Charity became known for helping the poor and the starving.

While she was working in Calcutta in 1952, officials gave Mother Teresa an old temple so she could open a home for the sick and suffering. She and the nuns were often seen gathering the dying from the streets of Calcutta and bringing them to a warm, clean environment. They were doing important work. They were making a difference.

One year later, Mother Teresa's first orphanage was opened, and in 1957, the Missionaries of Charity began working with people who had leprosy. These people were living away from others. They were not getting help, and her work was extending to hundreds of places around the world. In 1979, she was awarded a Nobel Peace Prize for her efforts on behalf of the sick and poor.

In 1990, Mother Teresa was slowing down. Her health was failing. However, she was still working every day until she could no longer. Her work and good deeds will be remembered for years to come.

Learning Points

Past Continuous Tense

You can use the Past Continuous or Past Progressive tense to talk about an action that was happening at a time in the past.

How to form the Past Continuous:

(was/were) + present participle (verb -ing)

You can use the Past Continuous when you are referring to actions that were in progress at a time in the past.

Remember that different subjects have different be forms.

Negative form of the Past Continuous:

(was/were) + NOT + present participle (verb -ing)

You can use the Past Continuous to show that an action was happening when another action occurred. The action in the continuous tense started before the other action or point in time and may continue to happen after.

I was watching TV at 10 pm last night. (I started watching TV before 10 pm and was still watching at 10 pm.)

Maria was cooking dinner when her husband came home. (Maria was in the middle of cooking dinner when her husband came home.)

Maria cooked dinner when her husband came home. (If you use Simple Past for both clauses, it means that her husband came home first and then Maria cooked dinner.)

When you want to tell a story or relate events that happened, you can use the Past Continuous to describe the scene or background. You will probably use a mix of the Simple Past and the Past Continuous since the Simple Past describes the actions in the past.

It was midnight. Anna was in bed but she couldn't sleep. The rain was falling in sheets and the trees were blowing in the strong winds. A branch was knocking against the window of her bedroom. She was scared and wanted to call a friend to come over.

Examples:

- She was still doing her religious training in 1928 when she went to India.
- As they were working, Mother Teresa and her Missionaries of Charity became known for helping the poor and the starving.
- However, she was still working every day until she could no longer.

Time Clause: Events at the Same Time

You use time clauses to link different clauses and events.

You can use time clauses to show that actions are happening at the same time (or simultaneous actions).

Time clauses are dependent clauses and must be connected to a main clause to form a complete sentence. It can come before or after a main clause. It is followed by a comma if it comes first.

You can use the conjunctions as, when and while for:

- actions that are in progress in the background when another action happens. You usually use continuous tenses with the longer actions.
 - Someone rang the doorbell as I was cleaning the apartment.
 - Someone rang the doorbell when I was cleaning the apartment.
 - Someone rang the doorbell while I was cleaning the apartment.
- two longer situations happening at the same time. You use while more commonly with continuous verb forms.
 - While I was taking a shower, my sister was brushing her teeth.*
- something that happened at a particular time in the past
 - When I was in university, I joined the swim team.*
- you also use as when you want to say that something changes at the same time as another event starts.
 - As I was feeding my baby brother, I realized he had a fever.*

Examples:

- She was still doing her religious training in 1928 when she went to India.
- While she was serving as the principal in a Catholic high school in Calcutta, Mother Teresa was moved by the number of sick people in the city's streets.*
- However, she was still working every day until she could no longer.
